■ Market commentary

January's market performance reflected growing uncertainties amid the new US administration's aggressive policy agenda. President Trump's rapid push to enact campaign promises, including tariffs on imports from Mexico, Canada, China, and potentially the EU, sparked initial optimism but soon gave way to sharp market volatility.

US growth prospects remained strong, with a resilient consumer and labour market, boosting equities and bond yields in the first half of the month. However, news of China's DeepSeek AI model, potentially disrupting US tech dominance, led to a significant sell-off in megacap tech stocks, especially semiconductor stocks like Nvidia, which lost $500bn of its market capitalisation in just one day. Later in the month, Trump's aggressive tariff moves heightened market volatility.

Despite this, global equities returned 3.5% in January, with the US up 2.8%. Europe and the UK outperformed, with returns of 7.0% and 5.8%, driven by lower exposure to tech stocks and expectations of rate cuts. The ECB cut rates by 25bps, with further cuts expected, while the Bank of England is also set to ease. In contrast, the Fed held steady.

Bond markets returned 0.5% over the month as measured by the ICE BofA Global Broad Market index, with US Treasuries and US corporate investment grade returning 0.5% and 0.6% respectively.

The US dollar strengthened on tariff news, while currencies of affected regions, including the Canadian dollar, Mexican peso, and euro, weakened. Tariffs, particularly on Chinese imports, raise inflation concerns, already reflected in rising inflation expectations. US inflation expectations have doubled since mid-September, with market-implied 2-year inflation now at 3.0%, signalling potential price pressures ahead.

While tariffs and their impacts on trade and growth remain uncertain, the US economy is entering 2025 in relatively strong shape, making it more resilient to trade disruptions than many of its peers. However, the AI developments in China and the vulnerability of US megacap tech stocks to any negative news add significant volatility risks. We expect heightened uncertainty and volatility to persist in 2025. The ongoing monetary easing cycle supports asset valuations, but a more cautious outlook is warranted. Diversification remains key, particularly outside the high-risk tech sector. While we don't expect a sustained market sell-off, opportunities will arise from tactical shifts in response to volatility.

Returns before this date are back tested using the portfolio's fund holdings and published returns for these as at the date of launch date, which would not reflect Equilibrium's historic asset allocation views, or any changes, which would have been made to the portfolio's holdings over time. From the launch date, returns are based on the published returns for the portfolio's fund holdings and any changes which are made to these. All returns are calculated on a total return basis after the deduction of all fees. Returns for periods exceeding one year are annualised. All returns are quoted in US dollars, unless otherwise stated. Total investment charges (TIC) are the sum of a fund's total expense ratio (TER) and the transaction costs (TC). The portfolio's asset allocation is based on the weighted average of the underlying funds in which the portfolio invests using the latest available data. The portfolio's asset allocation may differ from time to time due to market movements, changes to the portfolio and the underlying fund data and limitations. The underlying funds will contain exposure to assets that are invested globally, which may present additional risks. The value of an investor's investment and the income arising from it will therefore be subject to exchange rate fluctuations. Foreign securities may have additional material risks, depending on the specific risks affecting that country, such as: potential constraints on liquidity and the repatriation of funds; macroeconomic risks; political risks; foreign exchange risks; tax risks; settlement risks; and potential limitations on the availability of market information. The portfolio may also invest in funds which do not permit daily dealing. Investments in such funds will only be realisable on their dealing days. It is not possible to assess the proper market price of these investments, other than on the fund's dealing days. Higher risk investments may be subject to sudden and larger falls in value in comparison to other investments. Higher risk investments include, but are not limited to, investments in smaller companies (even in developed markets), investments in emerging markets or single country debt or equity funds and investments in high yield or non-investment grade debt. Individual investor returns may differ as a result of platform and adviser fees, the actual investment date, cash flows and other transactions.
